This baby boy was only two hours old when he was found yesterday, January 2nd in Nottingham. He was naked and wrapped in a blanket.

Nurses at Nottingham City Hospital are taking care of the newborn. They said he was a bit cold when he was admitted to hospital but they warmed him up and he is fine now. They have named him Nicholas.

But the hospital computer system needed a full name, so they decided to call him Nicholas Christmas. Nurse Karen Evans said yesterday: "We all like the name Nicholas, but we hope he will soon have his real surname instead of being called Christmas."

Police are trying to trace his mother. Yesterday at six p.m. neighbours saw a young teenage girl run away quickly. Intrigued by her behaviour they went out and found the baby boy in their front garden. That's what saved Nicholas' life.
